Musical.ly is an application that is like a mobile game for children that offers free current music songs in which users can record videos, sing songs, and then publish them. The developers are based in Shanghai, but they also have an office in Santa Monica, California.

The application proposes to record a video of how the user sings a song and then synchronizes the sounds of the song with the lip movements of the video. In this way, the two will overlap to appear authentic and elaborate. Each user has the opportunity to show their creativity within the range of 15 seconds to one minute for a clip that can be recorded once or multiple times. Now that video is a fact of help, there are several tools that can now be handled in a special way to make sure it stands out from the rest. This involves adjusting speeds from slow to fast or using filters, for example. Of course, there is also the possibility to share videos publicly to upload them through the platform.

As a good social gaming network, all users who post their videos on the platform can interact with each other, creating a large community of people interested in such musical tastes. Someone may suggest that you do a duet or ask questions, don't worry about inspiring others. Hashtags are the easiest way to find what interests you. There is also no material for popular artists, their songs, and various trends in French classes.

It is important to know that all recorded videos that are stored by default in the app must be manually saved in the video library of the mobile device being used, otherwise, once you decide to delete the app in the future you will lose everything your videos and races are played back recorded.

After a few tries, you will see how easy it is to edit it, create effects, cut areas you don't like, or just adapt it to your liking. If you are short on time and want to save or distribute a really important event through Live Moments for short videos, it is at this point that the application allows you to share it on the main social networks such as Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and etc. to convey your success to all your friends and family. And everyone is encouraged to use it and generate a little more creativity or even provocation.

TikTok fusion with Musical Ly!

Bytedance has bought Musically and instead of competing who is better, rather they merged, that is, they came together to make a much bigger application to grow twice as much. The logo of the musical.ly application was disappearing over time so that it was not such a radical change for people.

The videos were gradually changing and when you started saving them they were already made with the TikTok logo and also many have not seen the new update. You can download musical.ly free technically you must enter the play store or IOS store you must search musical.ly and out of nowhere you will see the option to open, update in green, click there and you already have it with the new logo.

What has changed the most is the part of the lupita that is where all the hashtags, the leaderboard and many other things came from because in general it is a change in itself more aesthetic.

What musical.ly tells you is that there will be no more leaderboard that it will not be necessary to upload too many videos for you to get many likes, if you want to be found or seen so that your name always appears at the top of the searches or between the TikTok tops you have to do the hashtags which is the most important thing to keep growing so that people know you.

It is much cooler and has new tools such as there is one that is a video reaction, you will be reacting to the videos and that people see your funny reaction or what your face was when you saw this to be able to have fun with it.

Now users who post on TikTok will no longer be called Musers but will now be TikToKers! And the best thing about this cake is that now when you upload a video you should not click on save anymore since it does it automatically saving you a step being thus super comfortable.
